BY ATLANTIC CABLE

Concerning the Decision at Geneva

LONDON, September 2 —It is reported that Lord John Russell is preparing a review of the proceedings and award of the Geneva Board

The Chambers of Commerce in several of the leading cities of England have adopted resolutions congratulating the Government on the happy termination of the arbitration and copies of the resolutions have been forwarded to the United States

The Right Hon Mr Foster in an address to his constituents at Bradford to night said the object of the Geneva Tribunal was not merely to preserve peace but to preserve and increase friendship Before the settlement of the Alabama claims the state of feeling had been such that it might at any time have caused war Forbearance on both sides was very necessary In conclusion, he said the decision at Geneva not only gives America three million pounds sterling but gives peace to both countries and new international rules of the highest value besides establishing a precedent that cannot fail to be beneficial to all nations

Lowe in his speech at Glasgow on the Geneva award expressed his opinion that it was unnecessary and unusual for the arbitrators to give reasons for their award The arbitrators had no power to lay down principles of international law The Tribunal was not constituted for that purpose He did not believe that England was bound by the principles which guided the arbitrators He thought the necessity for ratification by the United States Senate of every treaty with foreign powers was a most dangerous and perplexing difficulty He hoped that England would enter upon a new era in her relations with America—an era in which all jealousies and animosities will disappear

Wheather clear

The China steamer due to day is not yet in sight

Potatoes

Using a vulgarism potatoes will likely be potatoes in the United Kingdom the coming winter The New York Herald says

The terrible visitation which brought famine and death in its train a few decades ago has again made its appearance in the British Isles This time the danger is no longer confined to Ireland, but seems to extend over the United Kingdom, and so the area of misery will no doubt be increased It is peculiarly unfortunate that the blight should occur at a moment when the agricultural population of England are in a state of moody discontent The efforts made by this class last year to improve their condition have aroused in the minds of the farming classes a desire to teach the laborers their dependence on those who own the land, and no doubt advantage will be taken of the misery of the people to make them experience all the bitterness of helpless poverty The result is by no means clear So far, the spirit shown by the chawbacons demonstrates that they will not lightly consent to allow themselves to be suppressed The English lower classes present a difficulty that was not met with in Ireland They have no pride of family which prevents them seeking refuge in the workhouse On the contrary the agricutural poor are in the habit of looking forward to it as a natural retreat This will throw the expense of maintaining them on the rich and it is questionable whether such a solution of the difficulty will be found satisfactory, especially as it is almost certain to be followed by an agricultural strike for higher wages in the Spring, which must be submitted to unless the farmers are prepared to risk the loss of the harvest

PHILOSOPHY OF THE LUDICROUS — Sydney Smith says The sense of humor is incompatible with tenderness and respect ' He would like to know if any man living would have laughed to see Sir Isaac Newton rolling in the mud I would like to know if any man dying even, could have helped laughing to see Sir Isaac rolling in the mud How does Sydney Smith come to think of such a thing? It comes of his being a humorist, and of his seeing the humorous, side of this imaginary pathetic spectacle Its grotesqueness suggested it Sydney Smith was at once an example and a champion of the philosophy of the ridiculous The truth is that tenderness and respect are indispensable to the sense of of the ludicrous The greater our respect for the prostrate philosopher the more ridiculous he appears to us So long as he is not in peril of life or limb there is no restraint upon the sense of the grotesque except that of social etiquette and however we may curb our risibilities we cannot deaden our sensibilities We smile inwardly if we do not laugh outwardly Not long ago I saw a fastidiously gotten up fellow creature fall head long on the thin slop on the London pavement Many smiled some laughed outright I may have laughed—at all events I smiled not maliciously I hope but discourteously I fear for as the disfigured dandy scrambled to his feet he looked daggers at me and exclaimed What the deuce is it your business It was none of my business We are instinctly amused at anybody who tumbles in the street unless it is one s own suit of clothes that does the tumbling then we do not do the laughing All the more spontaneously do we laugh if the anybody is a somebody a Sir Somebody or other for example, when we see rolling in the mud Why? Because of the sudden juxtaposition of the pathetic and the comic rendered more extreme by the rank of the individual The philosophy of the thing is the philosophy of the ridiculous —Temple Bar

THE WIFE —In comparison with the loss of a wife all other bereavements are trifles The wife, she who fills so large a space in the domestic heaven, she who is so busied, so unwearied—bitter is the tear that falls on her clay You stand beside her grave and think of the past, it seems an amber-colored pathway, where the sun shone upon flowers, or the stars hung glittering overhead. Fain would the soul linger there. No thorns are remembered above that sweet clay, save those your own hand may have unwillingly planted. Her noble, tender heart lies open to your inmost sight You think of her as all gentleness, all beauty and purity But she is dead The dear head that so often laid upon your bosom, now rests upon a pillow of clay The hands that ministered so untiringly are folded, white and cold, beneath the gloomy portals The heart, whose every beat measured an eternity of love, lies under your feet. And there is no white arm over your shoulder now, no speaking face to look up into the eye of love, no trembling lips to murmur "Oh, it is so sad " There is so strange a hush in every room No smile to greet you at nightfall And the clock ticks and ticks and ticks—it was sweet music when she could hear it Now it seems to knell only the hours through which you watched the shadows of death gathering upon her sweet face. But many a tale it telleth of joys past, sorrows shared, and beautiful words and deeds registered above. You feel that the grave cannot keep her You know that she is in a happier world, but feel that she is by your side, an angel presence Cherish these emotions, they will make you happier Let her holy presence be as a charm to keep you from evil. In all new and pleasant connections, give a place in your heart. Never forget what she has been to you—that she has loved you. Be tender to her memory

SUNDAY MORNING SEPT 29, 1872

The Struggle Ended

The Senatorial contest has at length ended in the withdrawal of Senator Corbett and the election of Mr Mitchell

When the Joint Convention assembled yesterday Hon W W Bristow Senator from Lane county announced that he was authorized to withdraw the name of Senator Corbett and sent to the Clerk's desk the following letter which was read before the Convention

SALEM, Sept 28 1872

HON W W BRISTOW You are hereby authorized to withdraw my name before the Legislature as a candidate for the United States Senate I thank you and the rest of my friends for placing upon record your preference for me I shall, as heretofore labor for the perpetuity and integrity of the Republican party, and for the advancement of its principles

Circumstances have been such that in the judgment of my friends and the people they represent it was not wise for me to go into caucus They are as true and good Republicans as are in our ranks. They thought they were entitled to their opinions as to what was for the best interests of the people and the Republican party This preference cannot be longer pressed in my opinion, without danger to the unity, strength and perpetuity of that party For these reasons, I ask that my name be withdrawn

Yours very respectfully,
H W CORBETT

After the reading of this letter the ballot was taken, when Mr Mitchell received the votes of all the Republicans but two These voted blank

Probably the history of politics on the Pacific coast has not shown a more exciting election, or one in which the friends of the respective candidates labored with greater earnestness and persistency for success certainly there has been none which showed in so strong a light the devotion of the Republicans to the principles and organization of their party Even when the excitement ran highest, both the candidates and their friends, without a single exception to our knowledge were united upon the one point, that the conflict must in no event be pushed so far as to endanger the harmony of the party in the future, and it was this consideration that led Mr Corbett to withdraw.

It is due to those who opposed the election of Mr. Mitchell to say that their opposition was not to him personally, but to the means by which his election was brought about They contended for a principle and practice in party politics which they believed to be essential to the maintenance of any party organization, which is in accordance with established Republican usage, and which commends itself to the consciences of all men The election of a Senator was, to them rather the occasion of a protest, than the object of a contest It is hoped and believed the future will prove this protest not to have been made wholly in vain.

Mr. Mitchell possesses much greater ability than the average lawyer or politician, and in energy and industry has few if any equals in the State He has capacity to distinguish himself and make Oregon a good and useful representative in the Senate of the United States, and in doing so he will entitle himself to, and will receive the cheerful, hearty and undivided support of the Republican party.

The election is over let the dead past bury its asperities, while the undivided Republican party goes on to the work that lies before it.

MRS. SURRATT—In one of his recent speeches in Tennessee Andrew Johnson referred as follows to the Surratt case, he having been arraigned for not pardoning Mrs Surratt:

"The home of Mrs. Surratt was the head quarters of those who conspired against the Government, and out of the conspiracy which was formed resulted the assassination of the President After Mr Lincoln was assassinated the Attorney General was called upon for his opinion, and gave it that the conspirators could be tried by military tribunal They were all duly tried, and the verdict of guilty pronounced by the court. The question then was whether the President will pardon Mrs. Surratt or not. Under all the circumstances, it was my opinion I could not grant a pardon The accusation made against me for not doing so, would have placed your Governor in the same position should he refuse to pardon a notorious criminal after having been duly convicted by a jury Under the circumstances, I deemed it my duty to let the law take its course and let her be executed I expect you will complain of me for having pardoned many other persons Now, a man may do wrong both ways He might refuse to pardon when it should be granted, and when he should not, he might be induced to pardon But if I erred in any one thing it was in granting pardons Likely enough some of those who were the objects of my clemency raised the most noise about my refusal to pardon Mrs Surratt If I have done wrong, I have done it with correct motives and a correct understanding "

RESPONSIBILITY FOR RAILROAD ACCIDENTS ON SUNDAY.—A very satisfactory conclusion has been reached by the Supreme Court in the case of Mrs Albert J Festal, injured on the Middlesex horse cars on Sunday while returning from a Spiritualist open-air gathering at at Malden. The defendant corporation, it will be remembered, desired to escape the $5,000 verdict rendered against them on sundry grounds, of which one was that the traveling of the plaintiff on Sunday was illegal This would be profitable ground for the companies if it could be sustained, for their travel is vast on Sundays But unfortunately for them the court finds that the attending of such a gathering as the above is a legitimate use of the day, and the company must pay for their negligence The day has gone by in this commonwealth when courts can be asked to taboo or put under the ban of their displeasure any form of worship or means of instruction, however faulty or valueless these may seem, if practiced in good faith —Boston Transcript

INCREASE OF RAILWAY DISASTERS —The tradition that railroad traveling is safer in England than in other countries is rudely shattered by the latest Parliamentary returns on that subject It appears from official returns that the following number of persons were killed or injured on railways open for traffic in the United Kingdom in eleven years from 1861 to 1871, both inclusive

	Killed	Injured		Killed	Injured
1861	284	8[illegible]	1867	[illegible]	[illegible]
1862	216	600	1868	212	[illegible]
1863	184	470	1869	[illegible]	1,2[illegible]
1864	[illegible]	7[illegible]	1870	[illegible]	1,2[illegible]
1865	221	1,3[illegible]	1871	404	1,[illegible]01
1866	[illegible]15	244

Here is a total of persons killed in 1871 more than a hundred in excess of the fatal accidents in 1870 besides a steady increase in the number of persons injured on railroads from 1866 to 1871 with the exception of a single year, when the comparatively small number of six hundred persons received hurts

At a recent sitting of country magistrates in England two boys under twelve years of age, who had been convicted of having broken into a house and stolen two silver watches instead of being sent to jail were sentenced to receive [illegible] lashes each with a birch rod

In the examination of political economy at the University of London this year for the scholarship founded by Ricardo the eminent political economist four young men and four young ladies contested The prize was awarded to M[illegible] O[illegible] Le[illegible] sser of [illegible] D Mason

GEO. P. NEWELL,
Teacher of the Pianoforte, Organ, Harmony and Vocal Culture.

Harmony is the Life Soul and Beauty of Music It is a most pleasing and interesting study, and it is a necessary and important study to all who wish to render a composition according to the design of the author It is a matter of surprise to all my advanced pupils why their former teachers did not teach them Harmony

All communications left at Gray's or Gill & Steel's Music Stores will be promptly attended to au8dtf

UNSAFE TO JOKE —It is not always safe [illegible] with the benighted Celestials. A lo[illegible] lady of this city, on hearing from one [illegible] domestics his determination to return [illegible] native land, twitted him upon the su[illegible] matrimony "Well, well! Ah Wum [illegible] back to get a wife, I [illegible]" "Me [illegible] "What sort of a girl is she?" "Belly [illegible] man!" "Well, tell us, Ah Wum, is she [illegible] aristocratic sort—'A No. 1,' you know—[illegible] who have such little wee feet?" Ah Wu[illegible] innocently)—"Oh, no! no! no! not littl[illegible] great big feet! all same yours!"

RUMORED SHOOTING SCRAPE —About 8 [illegible] last evening a report reached our office [illegible] shooting affray had just occurred at the [illegible] of First and Morrison streets, in which a [illegible] nent member of the Portland bar was one [illegible] parties Our reporter rushed furiously to t[illegible] expecting to find a fellow mortal weltering [illegible] gore, but behold his astonishment when he [illegible] at the scene of slaughter and found that th[illegible] shot was only aimed at a vicious dog which [illegible] some way aroused the ire of the legal [illegible] man The "dog is dead "

CATTLE —Last evening the steamer [illegible] Thompson from Astoria, stopped about [illegible] at the mouth of the Wallowet, to wait [illegible] arrival of the Oneonta. All the passeng[illegible] vessels were transferred to the Dixie Th[illegible] and the Oneonta proceeded down to Mo[illegible] with a band of cattle for that point. SUNDAY MORNING, SEPT 22 1872

CITY.

N P R R.—The following in regard to the Northern Pacific Railroad, we clip from the Puget Sound Business Directory "The Puget Sound branch, in all probability will be completed in two years as it is being pushed forward rapidly. Work was first commenced on this in May, 1871, and in eight months the first twenty five miles were finished Mr J B Montgomery superintended the construction of these and also contracted for the second ten miles which would make the total of his contract thirty five miles up to this date J L Hallet & Co contracted for the construction of thirty miles more and the two sections will be completed together about the first of October, and the cars will in all probability be running the entire distance of sixty five miles by the 15th of October The distance between Portland and Olympia can then be made in ten hours instead of forty eight, as heretofore A branch road will run from the main line to Olympia, a distance of fifteen miles The work on that end of the road has been the hardest thus far on any portion The excavation on Mr Montgomery's contract of thirty five miles reached a total of 1,000,000 yards, and on Mr Hallett's about half that quantity On the first twenty five miles the earth excavation reached 150,000 yards 20,000 feet of pile trestle building were required, and four Howe truss bridges from 100 to 208 feet, were constructed The second ten miles required 220,000 cubic yards of excavation, about 7,000 feet of pile trestle bridging, and the construction of three Howe truss bridges from 110 to 330 feet in length The ... difficulty in the construction of the second ... miles was the hard rock encountered. To ... this, steam drills, boring a hole nine inches in depth per minute—that is about ten times faster than hand labor—were used The labor of construction was about equally divided ... the whites and Chinese there being about 400 of the former and 800 of the latter employed on the first thirty five miles and the same ... extended throughout"

To Exhibitors —In response to numerous enquiries in relation to the manner in which articles ... are to be entered at the State Fair, ... on Monday, we publish the following, taken from the Rules of Order of the Society.

NOTES ON FASHION

Hat of black straw with blue plumes and lace scarf

Jet is quite a fashionable ornament among ladies abroad

Most of the new fall wraps are in the sacque Talma form, about the prettiest is the Dolman

Two street fashions have departed this life, the perpetually carried umbrella and the universal buttonniere

Ladies say that sea fog ... for complexions but they know it is very bad for crimps and light dresses

Sleeveless jackets are much worn now the prettiest shapes are the Lucca, the Valette, and the Griselle

In Paris the ladies are wearing high combs from which depends a bit of lace or a spray of flowers The style is somewhat Spanish but very effective

In walking costumes we have seen a very elegant and unique suit of silk and cashmere The skirt of golden brown poult de soie is trimmed on the bottom with a deep flounce

White dresses and cool light robes of pale tints are still apropos to these warm days and the fall bonnet which is at present a delightful bit of uncertainty is welcome to wait for a while

A white Belgian straw is trimmed with black velvet ribbon arranged in loops around the crown and falling in fringed ends at the back Aigrette of black ostrich plumes upon the side Black velvet strings

A round hat of white chip has the brim raised upon one side and lined with Maroon velvet band with black Chantilly around the crown, and a bunch of maroon and white marguerites upon one side A bow of velvet and black lace with short ends at the back

A hat of black Neapolitan straw is trimmed with black lace and narrow scarlet velvet ribbon A wing of scarlet velvet and black feathers is placed upon one side A wide black velvet ribbon is looped with the scarlet around the crown and falls in two long ends at the back

A beautiful evening dress is made of rich brocaded silk, white ground with broad blue satin stripes Between the strings are bouquets of pink roses with green foliage The corsage is cut low with short sleeves Over dress of white-figured lace trimmed with point applique headed with blue ribbon The corsage has a deep bertha of point applique and sleeves of the same Ornaments pearls, and pink roses in the hair

The old saying is "What everybody says must be true," and everyone says that Beck & Waldman have the largest and best selected stock of the latest styles and patterns in gentlemen's Clothing and Furnishing Goods in the city of Portland They have the largest variety of Boy's Youth's and Children's Suits, all which will be sold according to the times Please call and satisfy yourself that we will not be undersold by anyone

Half Alive

It is a sad thing to pass through life only half alive Yet there are thousands whose habitual condition is one of languor and debility They complain of no specific disease they suffer no positive pain but they have no relish for anything which affords mental or sensuous pleasure to their more robust and energetic fellow beings

In nine cases out of ten this state of lassitude and torpor arises from a morbid stomach Indigestion destroys the energy of both mind and body When the waste of nature is not supplied by a due and regular assimilation of the food every organ is starved every function interrupted

Now what does common sense suggest under these circumstances of depression The system needs rousing and strengthening; not merely for an hour or two to sink afterwards into a more pitiable condition than ever (as it assuredly would do if an ... alcoholic stimulant were resorted to) but radically and permanently

How is this desirable object to be accomplished? The answer to this question founded on the uniform experience of a quarter of a century is easily given Infuse new vigor into the digestive organs by a course of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters Do not waste time in administering temporary remedies but wake the system up by ... recuperative strength ... energy ... depend ...

By the ... the dyspeptic will ... Appetite will be created ... to digest what it craves ... —until ... and ... flows through ... instead of the ... with which they have been imperfectly nourished

He Will Come

"At even or at midnight, or at the cock crowing, or in the morning"

It may be in the evening,
  When the work of the day is done
And you have time to sit in the twilight
  And watch the sinking sun
While the long bright day dies slowly
  Over the sea
And the hour grows quiet and holy
  With the thoughts of me
While you hear the village children
  Passing along the street
Among those thronging footsteps
  May come the sound of my feet
Therefore I tell you, Watch,
  By the light of the evening star
When the room is growing dusky
  As the clouds afar
Let the door be on the latch
  In your home
For it may be through the gloaming
  I will come

It may be when the midnight
  Is heavy upon the land
And the black waves lying dumbly
  Along the sand
When the moonless night draws close,
And the lights are out in the house
When the fires burn low and red,
And the watch is ticking loudly
  Beside the bed
Though you sleep tired out on your couch
Still your heart must wait and watch
  In the dark room
For it may be that at midnight
  I will come

"It may be at the cock crow
When the night is dying slowly
  In the sky,
And the sea looks calm and holy,
  Waiting for the dawn
  Of the golden sun
  Which draweth nigh
When the mists are on the valleys, shading
  The rivers chill,
And my morning star is fading, fading
  Over the hill,
Behold I say unto you Watch,
Let the door be on the latch
  In your home,
In the chill before the dawning,
Between the night and morning,
  I may come

"It may be in the morning,
  When the sun is bright and strong,
And the dew is glittering sharply
  Over the little lawn,
When the waves are laughing loudly
  Along the shore,
And the little birds are singing sweetly
  About the door,
With the long day's work before you,
  You rise up with the sun
And the neighbors come in to talk a little
  Of all that must be done
But remember that I may be the next
  To come in at the door
To call you from all your busy work,
  For evermore.
As you work your heart must watch,
For the door is on the latch
  In your room,
And it may be in the morning
  I will come"

* * * * * *

Now I am watching quietly
  Every day
Whenever the sun rises brightly,
  I rise and say
'Surely it is the shining of His face'
And look unto the gates of His high place
  Beyond the sea,
For I know He is coming shortly
  To summon me.
And when a shadow falls across the window
  Of my room,
Where I am working my appointed task
I lift my head to watch the door and ask
  If he is come,
And the angel answers sweetly
  In my home
"Only a few more shadows,
  And he will come"

JOHN RICKSON'S TRIAL

[From the Overland Monthly.]

Back and forth—back and forth—John Rickson marched, almost spurning the confines of the noble room that seemed just now to hem him in. He wanted space—space to breathe in, space to think it all out in. Every nerve of his strong frame quivered, his eyes were bloodshot.

Once he stepped before an elegant toilet-table, daintily draped with delicate laces falling over masses of pale, lustreless pink silk, and lavishly furnished. Cases in gold filagree, bottles capped with silver that bore such slender tracery of leaf and vine as the spirit of the frost breathes upon crystal, little boxes filled with appliances for the delectable tinting of Aura's complexion, here an oddly shaped bit of silver, with tiny blades, devoted to the trimming of her shapely nails.

Well, he had always delighted in Aura's stately beauty. Why should the sight of these things make him frown and gnaw his teeth and groan like a man plunged in the very depths of despair?

John was thirty five and not handsome. There was power in his face; it was capable of a wonderful illumination at times. Once seen it could never be forgotten; once loved it sent thrills to the heart for a lifetime.

He was of medium height, his limbs were straight and symmetrical, his chest was broad and the muscles of his arms were as hard as iron. He was an enemy to be dreaded in the time of sudden rage—of overwhelming anger.

Once, as he stood there, he lifted his heavy hand as if to sweep off the pretty appliances over which he brooded with set lips and eyes that held a story in their gloom, but just at that moment there came a knock at the door, and he stepped back panting.

"Who's there?" he asked between his teeth.

"Master—father," exclaimed a voice pure and clear as some note of divinest music.

"Go away," he said almost harshly. "I don't want you now. Will she never have done calling me master, I wonder?" he added.

And yet, before he spoke, there had come over his face a strange quick rapture. He had taken one or two steps toward the door, then stopped, with both hands held hard against his breast, as if in the act of holding back some demon. Then he listened with ear intent, his head thrust forward.

Utter silence, then a slow rustle as of a woman's garments, then a lingering step—irresolute, faint, yet fainter—then silence again.

"I need not have been so harsh with the child," he said under his breath, "but what am I to do? God only knows how I suffer, treachery on the one hand and the sweetest love that ever a man could take to his heart on the other. Aura, I would have been true to death but you have made my cup very bitter, woman, very bitter. And Oliver"—he paused, his lips trembled, his voice grew broken—"whom I loved with a love passing that of woman—oh my God and you too have betrayed"

He threw himself into a deep armchair by the window. Passing [illegible]

They had grown up together [illegible] together, gone into business together [illegible]

John travelled [illegible] brought home a wife—a lovely creature upon whom the sun of prosperity had always shone—an heiress. Poor John, he had given the whole wealth of his heart to a heartless girl and he knew it soon to his cost. She cared for nothing but her pampered self. He indulged her in all her fancies, even to the adoption of a pretty child a few years after their marriage.

For a while the child pleased her as a new toy might, and then she tired of it. But John loved the little creature. She amused him with her artless prattle. As she grew older and made progress in her studies and accomplishments she gave a soul to the long useless grand piano which stood in one of the parlors, and John was passionately fond of music.

The girl was now sixteen, and John, whose wife had resolutely driven him from her by long continued coldness, had allowed himself to fasten the broken tendrils of his love about this gentle woman child.

But God help the man! He had not known how it stood till now—now—when he held in his hand a crushed paper—the half of a note directed in his wife's hand to dear Olly—and whose contents indicated that a correspondence had been going on these years between his partner and that woman.

His blood had run fire in his veins ever since. The first impulse of his outraged soul was to seize a pistol and shoot Oliver Dyas dead—dead! And then there had come to his heart a revelation that palsied his hand and made him cowardly. He shrank from himself. He could not all at once tear out the strong love that had been so constant ever since he had first known Oliver. He could not deny that the voice of Bessy Rickson was sweeter to his ear than the sweetest music. He was torn by contending desires, agonies and fears.

Bessy had lingered long at the door, grieved at the harsh voice that forbade her to enter, and hoping he might relent. A lovely little figure all in spotless white, only one crimson wild rose shining against the rich gold of her hair, with eyes as blue as heaven and lips as pure as those of an angel, with only one desire in her heart—to comfort the man she had seen enter the house but a little while before, the sorrow of his soul legibly written on his face.

But the summons came not. Slowly, oh so slowly, pausing more than once, one pearly hand throwing back the beautiful curls, she retreated toward the staircase and quietly wended her way to a sitting room on the first floor—cool, shaded, and charming in its decorations. She crossed the wide matted hall and paused on the threshold. John's wife was lounging in a superb claw footed chair, the crimson glow of which added lustre to her dark beauty. In one hand she held a book, in the other a fine golden chain which she had just unwound from her wrist.

"Here Bess, put this on the stand for me," she said languidly. "Well, did you find your master?"

Bessy shook her head. She loved to hear him called her master, ever since he had superintended her studies in French. Something in her pliant nature answered to his imperious soul. Perhaps she came remotely from a race easy to subjugate and willing to be ruled.

"He's in one of his black moods, I suppose. I have encountered them once or twice in my life. He could be a human tiger, I think."

"Aura, don't say that," Bessy cried with a pained look. Since the child had attained her present stature Mrs Rickson had never allowed her to call her mother.

"I'm glad you think so well of him," responded the woman with a light laugh. "You may love him all you wish to—all I care. Do you hear?" she said with an evil light in her black eyes—"you may love him all you wish."

Bessy looked steadily at her and [illegible] Bessy. I think it angered the woman that the girl's pure eyes neither fell nor faltered in their glance, that the soft color of her cheeks never [illegible] as she answered:

"I [illegible] think I did love him better than [illegible] Aura."

"Pshaw," cried the woman under her breath [illegible]

Presently [illegible] her gossamer dress, pushed the fan away with such energy that it slid almost to the door, and to the floor, searching with wild glances.

"What have you lost?" Bessy asked, looking around from the table where she had deposited the chain.

"Nothing—a bit of paper—a memorandum. Go into the drawing room, Bessy, quick, quick. Run out into the [illegible]. I was there an hour ago. Run, I must have that paper, it will [illegible]"

Bessy hurried to search [illegible]

"I'll—I'll come [illegible]"

She went back [illegible] her face upturned to hers.

"I can't find anything, Aunt. I looked everywhere. There was a newspaper on the arbor and this little stuff, perhaps it is papers, but nothing else."

Aura seized it [illegible] whose it was—not John's—that tiny shining hand pointed [illegible]. Bessy noticed that her hand trembled as she took it.

"Was it very important?" she asked anxiously, wondering at the strained colorless face. "Can I do anything more?"

"No child, it was nothing but a list of things. Keep still about this stuff. John don't like to confess to carelessness," and with this lie on her lips she went into the sitting room and nervously looked over the pages of the book again.

And overhead—tramp, tramp, tramp! What was the matter with John? Could there have been a quarrel—could John have found?—she stood still suddenly in her walk to the window, clenched her hands and turned deadly pale.

There was no help for it.

"Fool—fool," she muttered, "to copy the letter. I never did such a thing in my life before, and to think"—again she gave a hurried glance about, again unfolded the half of the note, then resolutely crushing it thrust it into her pocket, turned and walked defiantly upstairs.

It would not do to falter, but she shook from head to foot as she touched the door knob.

"John, let me in. I want something," she said bravely.

The lock was turned, the door thrown wide open, and the face of her husband, terrible in its dark fixed anger, confronted her.

But she went in, assuming an air of unconcern. He shut the door after her, then he spoke.

"Aura"—she knew by his voice what to expect, and half turned. He of a sudden caught both of her hands and pinioned them in one of his. For the life of her she could not help shrinking from the glare of his eyes.

"So it seems I have been your tool and Oliver your dupe," he said through his shut teeth, as he drew her toward the window, she struggling but faintly. Then he held up the very half of the note which she had lost. She had the grace to cower at the sight of it, to grow gray to the lips as, with a low cry of despair, she strove to hide her face on the hands which he held like a vice, but he flung her from him with an awful oath, and she staggered and fell, not with the force of his arm but because of the deadly terror and faintness that oppressed her.

"I dare say you had it all arranged," he said in a low voice that held both anguish and anger, "but I'll thwart that. I'm going over to see him now."

At that she lifted her head. Her haggard dumb beauty had no power over him any more. She slowly lifted herself as he passed her, then she caught his arm with the strength of despair, and held him.

"What are you going to do to him?" she cried hoarsely.

John turned upon her, shook her off, bent his face and his wild eyes closer as the words came hissing upon the silence:

"Kill him."

Her shriek ran through the house. Bessy found her a moment afterwards in a fainting fit on the floor. It was sometime even after powerful restoratives had been applied before the guilty woman returned to consciousness. When she saw Bessy bending over her weeping like a child she turned away with a groan.

If indeed John had fulfilled his threat, her punishment was more than she could bear, for she had been the serpent in this paradise—the guilty wily tempter. She lay very still and would not let Bessy speak to her.

John was closeted in his counting room with the man who had been, as he thought, his life long friend. [illegible] words passed between them [illegible] seemed to John as if his heart was broken.

"You are not fit to live, Oliver Dyas," he said. "[illegible] at first when this discovery was [illegible] upon me I should have killed you like a dog. Now when you say that nothing but these treacherous letters has passed between you I [illegible] believe you, but from this moment our paths diverge. I shall [illegible] and leave the country [illegible] and wait [illegible]"

[illegible]

Bessy was waiting [illegible] wondering what had happened [illegible]

John was walking here and there [illegible] telling himself a wronged, wretched man, hating himself, Aura, Oliver—everybody but little Bessy.

Once he stopped [illegible]

[illegible] After all [illegible] might there not be some happiness in store for him? This bright pure [illegible] little girl who [illegible]

"My God [illegible]"

[illegible]

As he sat there his thoughts took [illegible] tempter [illegible] possible to be. He held the means of vengeance in his own hand [illegible] the scourge of power over his wife [illegible] this exquisite girl [illegible] Spite of himself, a rapt intense pleasure spread over his face, which grew beautiful as Bessy gazed up wistfully.

"What are you thinking of, master?" she asked.

Strange that now the word master did not offend him.

"I was thinking how pleasantly it would be to go off to a far country—say to Italy," he replied, that same beauty heightening his brow, "to see the old world wonders—its splendid skies and heaven high mountains; to buy some cottage nestling amid bowers of trees and roses, and there pass our lives, and never think of this cold cruel country again."

"O father," Bessy responded, creeping closer to him, "will you? When I have read about it it has seemed like paradise to me."

"It would be paradise," he murmured.

She lifted herself, and clinging to his side began touching his hair with her dainty fingers—a pretty caressing way she had, which was sweet to him.

"You would like to go then," he said, passing his arm about her waist.

"You know I would go anywhere with you," she answered, laying her cheek against his forehead, "but oh, of all places, to Italy." She drew a deep breath of content.

He let her rest thus, shutting his eyes while he thought, and the heavy throbs of his heart could almost be heard as he tallied with the dangerous temptation.

Why should he live a loveless life, betrayed, deceived, as he has been? Why should he not reap the fruits of an innocent devotion? He shuddered—innocent! And this child, with her golden locks and pure, Madonna face—this child who knew no other love, whom his arms had sheltered—whose very dreams were, as yet, guiltless as angels' visions!

"Go," he said, with a sudden impulse, his whole face growing dark, as he unwound his arm and pushed her from him. "I had rather be alone."

Surprised—grieved at his manner, which seemed rough—at his face, just now transfigured, but frowning and unlovely as he turned abruptly away—Bessy stood still where he had thrust her, her tender red lips quivering. She knew not what to say—what to do. Had she offended him? He stood at the window, his arms folded, looking into the garden, feeling in his soul that he had hurt her—that she was watching him with tearful eyes. Firmer he pressed his arms hard down upon his bosom, more sternly he called in his wandering thoughts, till he felt her touch upon his arm.

"Well," he said, not daring to look down.

"You were cross to me."

"No Bessy, not cross—but I have had great trouble to day. Go child, don't weary me."

She silently turned and almost ran from the room.

"Poor child!" he murmured in a hopeless dreary voice. "I must hurt her, but, to me it is like plucking out the right eye."

Bessy went up to her own room and came down no more that evening.

As for Aura, she was only too glad to be sure of her own miserable life—to know that Oliver had not been harmed. But she was weak enough to taunt John about Bessy when he told her that Oliver had gone away and that he intended to leave the country.

"And hereafter I am to be second to that little pauper," she said bitterly.

"You are not good enough for that," John made reply. "I am going to save my name from reproach, and to keep my beautiful wife out of mischief. As for Bessy"—his voice choked—"that pure child must no longer breathe the same air with treachery and corruption in the person of Aura Rickson. No, I shall leave her behind with my sister."

This news he communicated to Bessy very gently on the following day in the presence of his wife.

Bessy's cheek grew like marble; the child felt a cold despair creep into her heart. To leave these people whom she loved and live henceforth among strangers! What did it mean? And only the night before he had framed such beautiful pictures of other lands, he had asked her if it would please her to go to Italy, and she had said yes, and felt so happy, as if it was all settled. She said nothing however. John kept himself aloof. Aura was cold and forbidding, some wretched [illegible] some threatening of evil [illegible] ever in the atmosphere.

After all this was not really her home. Aura had told her so rudely enough years before. But she knew no other [illegible] parents, no other shelter, no other love. John had never given her an unkind word or look before, and she was [illegible] To leave them seemed an agony too great to bear.

"You are to go to L— with John tomorrow," Aura said, meeting her after one [illegible] moonlight evening. "I like Minna up to your room; she will help you pack. My trunks are there [illegible] the smaller one, and [illegible] tonight."

Bessy's heart was nearly bursting. Her proud little face [illegible] however she had become somewhat accustomed to the idea [illegible] Aura [illegible] Mechanically she threw down dresses and [illegible] boxes, scarcely hearing the steady stream of small talk which Aura [illegible] upon her.

"And [illegible] the girl [illegible] I am left [illegible] strangers. Nobody [illegible] I am lost [illegible]"

The time of trial [illegible]. Aura [illegible] good-bye kiss [illegible] coldly [illegible] turned away. John was [illegible] company [illegible] that was one [illegible] for the little white-faced girl who sat so silently and so patiently by his side.

As for him, well [illegible] that [illegible] he knew nothing of the [illegible] in his heart [illegible] soul. Many a time he said [illegible] to himself, "Why not quaff from the brimming cup so near to your lips. Take her with you now, away from the [illegible] of men. She will go; did she not say she would go wherever you went? Ay, like a slave she will do your bidding. Ask her."

He did turn half round in his seat, and she looked up at him with appealing eyes. O how he longed to gather her to his heart.

"You would go," he said impulsively.

"Where, father?"

"Anywhere with me."

"O you know I would," she answered, her beautiful eyes swimming with tears.

"To face to face," he muttered between set teeth.

He said nothing more [illegible] himself [illegible] the lover.

[illegible]

"Is it the little maid who [illegible] solitude [illegible] white forehead [illegible]"

Bessy strove to speak, but the words would not come.

"She [illegible] go up stairs and rest a moment, then I'll bring her down for you [illegible] journey, and you'll [illegible] stay to dinner. Unfortunately I have an engagement this morning, and I have kept the horse waiting till now. You will excuse me, I am sure."

Now came the struggle. He strove to say that he too had business, that it would be impossible for him to remain, that Bessy had better go [illegible] with her, but one look at the girl just unmanned him. So he sat himself down to fight the battle over. Every hour he felt weaker [illegible] his resolution.

His sister was gone, and a fair field for flight. Yes, even now the thought passed him—once away with Bessy and the triumph was his—yes, and Bessy was his.

Bessy apathetically took off her hat and shawl and tried to look interested in the beautiful things about her, but her heart was down stairs with John. She wanted to say so much to him, wanted to ask for an explanation of his strange and sudden alteration, if she only could find words to do it in. And perhaps—her heart beat fast—it might be just possible that if she could make one plea he would reconsider the matter, he would take her with him after all. Aura had told her that she wanted her; perhaps he did not know that. She could have flown down the stately stair case instead of waiting demurely for the madam to go with her.

"I am sure we shall be very good friends," said that lady when at last she was ready, and presently Bessy was alone with John.

Now she trembled—lost voice—lost courage.

John pointed to a superb piano forte open.

"Go," he said, "play me something, and," he added in a lower tone, "charm the devil out of me." Then he dropped his face in his hands. Bessy saw him, for the keys of the instrument faced the wall. She sang one of the sweet songs he loved, watching him, hoping that he would look up, to reward her with a smile perhaps.

He never moved. She played on—and on—till the music grew almost maddening to her, for as yet John had not moved. Then she stopped and watched him—no life, no motion—that same half despairing attitude. The silence frightened her. Was he asleep? The heart ceased almost to beat. Was he dead, that he sat thus, like a statue?

She crept round—she stood before him—she satisfied herself that he breathed, then she dropped at his feet and the old plaintive cry wailed forth:

"Master—father."

He moved his hands—they were wet; great tears stood on his lashes.

"O father, father, you are very unhappy. You have some secret terrible sorrow."

"Yes, God knows I have," he muttered.

"Tell me and let me help you some way, father—dear father, how could you leave me behind? I could have made you so happy. Aura never plays, but I can soothe you sometimes with music. It is very hard for me to stay. I shall be very, very unhappy. I know only you and Aura, and you two are all I love, and now you are going away so far. I may never see you again. O father, it is very hard!" Her head dropped on his knee.

"I could take her in my arms and hold her to my heart, and all hell should not tear her from me!" he muttered fiercely, between shut teeth.

Bessy's sobs prevented her from hearing.

"You have ceased to love me," she cried, "because I don't really belong to you—Aura said so. She wanted me to go."

"Ceased to love you! Great God! Bessy! look at me, child."

Bessy lifted her head, startled by the hoarse passion of his voice. She looked at him—caught the strange glow and fire—slowly arose, still held by that magnetic glance wherein all the power and sweetness of his soul seemed to be melting.

Then she drew back, then, with a quick cry, she lifted both hands and hid her face.

In that moment the veil was drawn away—the girl had changed to the woman. Like a flash of lightning came the consciousness of how this man loved her—and oh woe! of how henceforth and forever she would love him!

He saw it all intuitively, and one look of triumph flashed from his eyes.

Bessy stood pale, trembling and white—like one waiting to hear some fateful doom.

"Bessy—you see—you know—how—" In vain he strove to steady his voice. "Shall I take you with me to Italy?"

"O father." The pure little voice smote him to the soul. She was a white dove, and he was a wolf, he said savagely to himself.

"Bessy"—there was a great struggle—"kiss me, child, as you did before, and—I—I—must go."

She crept toward him blindly, still holding her eyes. He caught her to his bosom once.

"A father's kiss," he said with a great sob, and staggered out of the room.

For four years no one knew the history of the silent man who came out and went along the streets of the quaint Italian city. Only at the end of that time a letter was written by John to his sister, in which he sent the news of his wife's death by plague, and his determination to remain and spend his life where at last he had found peace.

And walking one day in a little park where the ruins of a once stately fountain stood, John felt a touch upon his arm, and a silvery voice, even more musical than of old, said softly:

"Master—father."

He had well earned his happiness, for he had not dared even to speak of her, for fear she was lost to him. But here she was—Bessy—ten times more beautiful, love in her sweet eyes, love on her lips.

"I'm not going to be driven away again," she said, as she took one arm and his sister leaned on the other. "We went to your lodgings, and the landlady said maybe we should find you here, so we drove as quickly as we could. Are you glad?"

"If I were in heaven, do you think any one would ask me if I were glad?" he answered, with that rare smile.

And so you can guess [illegible] is exactly as you imagine.

NATIONAL REPUBLICAN PLATFORM

ADOPTED BY THE REPUBLICAN PARTY IN CONVENTION AT PHILADELPHIA, JUNE 6, 1872.

The Republican Party of the United States [illegible] National Convention in the city of Phi[illegible] 5th and 6th days of June, 1872 again appeals to its history and announces its [illegible] the questions before the country.

1 During eleven years of its [illegible] accepted with grand courage the solemn [illegible] time. It has suppressed a gigantic rebellion, [illegible] four millions of slaves, decreed the equal [illegible] all and established universal suffrage [illegible] parallel magnanimity it criminally [illegible] for political offenses and has warmly [illegible] proved their loyalty by obeying the laws [illegible] justly with their neighbors. It has [illegible] toward the Indians. The Pacific Railroad and [illegible] enterprises have been generously aided and [illegible] conducted to completion, the public [illegible] freely given to actual settlers, immigration [illegible] tected and encouraged and a full acknowledgment [illegible] right of naturalized citizens secured from [illegible] powers. [illegible] national credit, and [illegible] most extraordinary burdens, it has [illegible] bonds at lower rates of interest. The [illegible] been carefully collected and honestly [illegible] the annual large reductions from the [illegible] the public debt has been reduced during [illegible] Presidency at the rate of $100,000,000 per [illegible] financial crisis has been averted and peace [illegible] prevail throughout the land. [illegible] ties have been peacefully and honorably [illegible] and the honor and power of the Nation [illegible] position throughout the world. This glorious [illegible] the past is the party's best pledge for the [illegible] believe that the people will not [illegible] to any party or combination of men [illegible] who chiefly have resisted every step in this [illegible] progress.

2 Complete liberty and exact equality [illegible] ment of all civil, political and public rights [illegible] tablished and effectually maintained [illegible] Union by efficient and appropriate State and [illegible] islation. Neither law nor its administration [illegible] mit of any discrimination in respect to [illegible] of race, creed, color or previous condition [illegible]

3 The recent amendments to the [illegible] tion should be cordially sustained [illegible] not merely tolerated because they are law [illegible] be carried out according to their spirit by [illegible] legislation, the enforcement of which can [illegible] ed only to the party that secured the amendments.

4 The National Government [illegible] honorable peace with all nations [illegible] everywhere, and sympathizing with all peoples [illegible] for greater liberty.

5 Any system of civil service under which [illegible] dinate positions of the Government are [illegible] wards for mere party zeal, is fatally demoralizing [illegible] we therefore favor a reform of the system [illegible] which shall abolish the evils of patronage [illegible] esty, efficiency and fidelity the [illegible] public position, without practically [illegible] of office.

6 We are opposed to further grants [illegible] to corporations and monopolists, and [illegible] National domain be set apart for free [illegible] people.

7 The annual revenue after paying [illegible] should furnish a moderate balance for the [illegible] the principal of the public debt, and [illegible] may be derived from a tax on tobacco [illegible] raised by duties on importations, which [illegible] ed to aid in securing remunerative wages [illegible] to promote the industries and growth and [illegible] the whole country.

8 We hold in undying honor the soldiers [illegible] whose valor saved the Union. Their [illegible] cred debt of the nation and the widows [illegible] those who died for the country are entitled [illegible] a generous and grateful people. We favor [illegible] tional legislation as will extend the bounty [illegible] ernment to all our soldiers and sailors who [illegible] bly discharged and who in the time of duty [illegible] abled, without regard to length of [illegible] of such discharge.

9 The doctrine of Great Britain and other [illegible] powers concerning allegiance, once a subject [illegible] subject having at last, through the efforts of [illegible] lican party, been abandoned, and the American [illegible] the right of an individual to transfer his allegiance [illegible] ing been accepted by European nations, it [illegible] our Government to guard with jealous care the [illegible] adopted citizens against the assumption of [illegible] claims by their former Government, and we [illegible] tinued and careful encouragement and protection [illegible] untary emigration.

10 The franking privilege ought to be [illegible] a way proposed for reductions in the rates of [illegible]

11 Among the questions which press [illegible] that which concerns the relations of capital [illegible] and the Republican party recognize the duty [illegible] legislation so as to secure a full protection [illegible] field for capital, and for labor which creates [illegible] largest opportunities and a just share [illegible] profits of these two great servants of civilization.

12 We hold that Congress and the President [illegible] ly fulfilled an important duty in their [illegible] suppression of violent and treasonable [illegible] certain lately rebellious regions and for [illegible] the ballot, and therefore they are [illegible] of the Nation.

13 We denounce the repudiation [illegible] in any form or disguise as a national [illegible] ness with pride the reduction of the principal [illegible] debt and of the rates of interest upon the [illegible] confidently expect that our excellent [illegible] will be perfected by a speedy [illegible] ment.

14 The Republican party is [illegible] to the loyal women of America for their [illegible] to the cause of freedom, their approval [illegible] to further usefulness is received with [illegible] the honest demands of any class of [illegible] rights should be treated with respectful [illegible]

15 We heartily approve of the action of [illegible] granting amnesty to those engaged in the [illegible] rejoice in the growth of peace and [illegible] throughout the land.

16 The Republican party proposes to [illegible] reserved by the people to themselves, as [illegible] powers delegated by them to the State and [illegible] governments. It disapproves of [illegible] al laws for the purpose of removing evils by [illegible] ference with rights not surrendered by the people [illegible] the State or National Government.

17 It is the duty of the General Government [illegible] such measures as will tend to encourage American [illegible] merce and ship building.

18 We believe that the modest patriotism [illegible] est purpose, sound judgment, [illegible] ruptible integrity and illustrious [illegible] have commended him to the heart of the [illegible] ple, and with him at our head we start [illegible] march to victory.
